

Educational Philosophy at Fukuoka University Graduate School of Law

Graduate School of Law has educational objectives to develop human resources capable of working in Japan and international society with the expert knowledge and application skills of law and political science, with the spirits of Fukuoka University's establishment as its basic philosophy.

See also: the spirits of Fukuoka University's establishment are "solid thought"; "moderate and fairness"; "simplicity and fortitude"; "active progression".

○Public Law major

◆Master's course

We foster human resources capable of acting as researchers, public servants, practitioners etc. in the future with expert knowledge and application power on constitution, administrative law, tax law, international law, economic law, sociology of law, legal history, political science etc.

◆Doctoral course

We develop highly skilled professionals on the constitution, administrative law, international law, sociology of law, legal history, political science etc. and a wide range of applied power, and able to contribute to academic development both inside and outside the university.

○Civil and Criminal Law major

◆Master's course

With specialized knowledge and applied power on civil law, commercial law, civil procedure, criminal law, law of intellectual property, Asian law etc., as future researchers, public servants, practitioners etc. We develop human resources who can be active.

◆Doctoral course

We cultivate human resources capable of action as researchers, public servants, practitioners etc. in the future, with advanced expertise on civil law, commercial law, civil procedure, criminal law, international private law etc. and wide application power.